

The Flat.

Tuesday.

Hiya Sweetheart,

Had a letter from you today, and a very amusing and sweet epistle it was too. I guess that today you have been suffering after your inoculation, and I hope the arm didn't swell up too badly.

So, any hope of leave is out for the time being is it honey? Well, we'll just have to console ourselves with the memory of our last one Heigh ho! until fortune smiles on us again. I agree darling - it is wonderful to rub noses with the one you love, go to sleep, wake up and find him still there - the precious!

Last night trying to get to sleep I wondered whether I could conjure up your image clearly enough to imagine that the room was our one at the Drive, that I was really sleeping on our divan & that if I cared to turn over I'd find you lying beside me, peacefully snoring. — But no such luck! My arms remained empty.

I rather enjoyed your story of the people in the carriage on Saturday, but I was surprised, nay shocked, to find you tactlessly trying to break up some happy lane before it had even passed the honeymoon stage. (I bet they cursed you soundly when they got out of the train.) Still you meant well honey, didn't you? only trying to help, eh dear? But I reckon quite a few people wished you'd kept your big mouth shut. Ha ha!

I love you sweet. You can open your big mouth as much as you like to me. He,
I love it! And every other bit of you, too.

Enough of that. It's hot enough here as it is, without dreaming of thee. I believe we're in for another August heat-wave, and I'll bet that you'll be bathing & sunbathing again this weekend & showing off your bronzed torso clad in its new red swim-trunks.

This is the last week of term for our language classes - after that there is a rest of about five weeks before the new session begins.
I think I shall just stick to the Int: French - Cos that's the one I enjoy most at the present moment.

Darling, The Dramatic Club is going to do "A Murder has been Arranged" by Evelyn Williams and Joan Fairlie suggested that I should try my hand at the juvenile lead - a young married woman. They are holding an audition in a fortnight's time and I can't make up my mind whether I'd be too scared to do anything in front of an audience.
What do you think Chum?

By the way honey I hope you haven't had a return visit of that old tummy-ache since you've been back in barracks.

Which reminds me honey. I did like the way you coupled your desire for me with the "burp of your stomach". So poetical!! Down to earth Westaway - that's my hubby.

Cully penned a screed to you this afternoon - had some time to kill - so thought she might as well try to brighten your day.

Please honey, when you write to her don't mention what I told you about her falling for this George Chappie. I'm quite sure that the feeling of remorse at causing her hubby unhappiness will be so many miles away (cos, of course, he has guessed what has happened from the tone of her letters) is reacting on her at the moment. I think she would wish the very minimum number of people to know about it, and I reckon I've been rather a rotten pal & betrayed a confidence. So minus the word Cherub, unless of course she has mentioned it herself.

Dorling am I one of those wives who would believe a perfect stranger before my husband? I don't know.

I noticed you queried a lot of your spelling. If it was to draw attention to your large-worded vocabulary - I'm not impressed - if, on the other hand it was meant as an apology for your poor spelling I would say that there is really no need - as I'm used to it.

By the way do you spell it CHOCOA or CHOKKA? My Navy stamp needs some revision.

Some new Fire-watchup orders were published today and I believe they will cut me out of office F.W. I hope so.
Anyway I shall doubtless hear more about that tomorrow evening.
Mr. Ridges usually wastes no time in spilling the beans.

Well my cherub - I have some ironing & mending to do before I retire - which I intend to do early. (Someone told me I was looking tired today.

I didn't tell her that I was just back from my honeymoon)

Still I mustn't get rings round my eyes. So early to bed for me until the roses are back in my cheeks.

Get that haddie with a face that only a mother could love to stum you to sleep with "Body & Soul" or "Memories of You".

Sweet dreams pidgeon,
Love & kisses

Clara
