Monday

Darling Hubby.

So there endeth
another happy weekend spent together.
One more honeymoon to add to our collection: Eh?

I hope you didn't cut it too fine this morning - shouldn't like to think of you being adrift. I guess they found something to keep you busy when you arrived, cos I didn't get a phone call. I waited until ten past six in case you got through then but I reckon you couldn't manage it.

Mrs. Huxley phoned me early to say that Hux has passed his W.O.S.B., despite his natural pessimism, and presumably now has to await a draft to OCTV. Grand news, eh?

Above all else it will keep him in England for another 6 months - for which his mum is very thankful. He is also due for some leave this weekend.

Rather a pity that you seem to have missed him again. The two letters enclosed were awaiting me when I arrived here this evening, so you can read just how little he expected to pass.

Life at the office has been very sleepy for me today - though I must say I have had plenty to do.

Mum & I went over to the Drive this evening to collect my bag - but the kids had evidently gone to the fides.

The laundry was there so I collared your collars (Ha! ha!) and will bring them down this weekend to Conip. If you can think of anything else you want - let me know here.
Your wish is my command.

Posted your letter off to the I.C.S. also & am anxious to see what sort of reply you get.

I'd like to be turning in,
crashing down, with you again tonight angel.

See why I'm tired.

Any news yet as to your next move? I suppose they will keep you in suspense for a few more days.

Anyway wherever they post you darling my heart will go with you. You sweet man you.

What wouldn't I give to be feeling the Westaway Bear dog right this minute? I wonder that when you are on leave we don't go around everywhere permanently locked in one another's arms.

If you want to nip me
I shall be on duty on Wednesday and you'll be able to get me between 9. and 10.

I'm tired if I say an avoir now here, cos my eyelids are drooping.

Be with you tomorrow,

All my love

Clare
