Sweetheart

I have come to bed to write to you tonight cos somehow I just wanted to shut the door on the world, and feel your presence all around me in our own little room.

Your pipes are all in their stand, and the tobacco jar and ash tray have been polished up and now reside on the chest too.

Now that this is no danger of a blitz I like to keep all our treasured possessions on show. It's funny how quickly a home grows. Just a few personal things, a photograph or two, and a room

Soon breathes an atmosphere.
Switch your photos over occasionally, but my favorite these days is the Po. one, and I guess that's because it's the way I saw you last.

I wander where we shall go for our next honeymoon angel? Do you ever dream of our meeting too.

Often I find my thoughts wandering at the office, and looking up at the sky I picture you getting off a train all sunburned, and I'll be waiting on the platform to hold your hand and smile my love to you again once more. Stay as sweet as you are dodging, even if the climate should get you down at times. And darling, please, always wear a hat, and don't avoid the sun-bathing cos it is just about the most dangerous & weakening thing in the world. Promise me please honey to do all ^{that} the medical people advise, and take all the sensible precautions. I know you will darling, but you know how these stupid women like to pull over their menfolk!

And now hubby-mine, I'm gonna switch off the light & make believe that you're in my arms.

S'night,

Close.

P.S. Those three little words still go. ✕
